How to Market for Sunday. on a Plan That Reduces the High Cost of Living.

It Is the Retailer Who Smilingly Tacks on the Big Price.

BY CHARLOTTE R. BANGS. (Founder of the Home Market

Only a little past midwinter, yet the consumer buying at wholesale markets nust now choose between old vegetables and new-the winter variety or spring and summer. New Yorkers are fast being spoiled, due to farmers of California, Piorida, Virginia and the Carolinas. By basket, crate, barrel these fresh supplies come from far away, adding to the wholesalers' dilemma in disposition of all. In turning over such out of season supplies to the that it is the retailer who smilingly 'tacke on' the price consumers so pay for what is actually most rea-

Quantities of kale and spinach spell disaster for the Virginia growers and shippers. Consumers have no warning of these shipments, nor retail price redustion. This seems all wrong for a market business principle. Celery, by case of six dozen, at $2.50 or $3, means th cents wholesale price, bunch. Retail charge of 12 cents is too steep.
Cabbage, 2 cents head, need be only cents retail. Kale, 2 cents head, need be only 5 cents retail. Onlone, 2 cents quart, need be only 4 cents retail. Grapefruit, large size, is really most desirable, cut open and contents scooped Only the caterers are wise to this possibility in large also grapefruit that goes begging at low price. Here conumers give no thought. There is plenty of celery at wholesale; why need retailers maintain steep rates? Endive. at 16 cents wholesale, will be retailed by the same firm for 18 cents a pound, yet retail stores ask 27 cents. It comes from Bolgium and France, is nearing its season's end and probably will keep ascending in price therefore. Cautiflowere's abundant and only $1.50 for box of 12-16 heads; retail price, 18-25
